TYPE: BACKPACK
RARIETY: VERY RARE

While this mechanism was originally mounted to a Drudgework Cleaver, it's obvious that a resourceful individual has repurposed the hopper and tail to be a usable backpack for the adventurer on the go. The tail is made of an especially hard metal and is controllable by the wearer of the pack. While it functions like a normal backpack, it has much more to offer for those that strap it to themselves.

While wearing this backpack, you gain remarkable propulsion while in or under water. Each foot of movement while swimming only costs 1 foot of normal movement instead of 2. Additionally while swimming, you can take the dash action as a bonus action.

Fling. You can use an action to kneel and place an object weighing up to 150 lbs or a willing creature of the same or smaller size as you on the tail and fling it towards a target within 60 ft of you. If you are launching a projectile weighing 10 lbs or more toward a creature, The creature must succeed on a DC 16 Dexterity saving throw or take 6d6+3 bludgeoning damage and be knocked prone. Once the tail has been used to fling something, it cannot fling anything again until 1 hour has passed.

Grease Keg. When you find this backpack, a grease keg is mounted to the top of the it. If you choose to launch it with the tail, it shatters on impact and coats a 15 foot radius sphere in grease. The area becomes difficult terrain. Creatures in the area must succeed on a DC 16 Dexterity saving throw or fall prone. A creature that enters the area or ends its turn there must also succeed on a Dexterity saving throw or fall prone. Replacement grease kegs are common and typically cost 2 gp.
