

{In a Vertibird}

Walter: You boys sure went out of your way to arrange this little trip. Hope this couldn't be used on something more important!

Knight: After what you did for us in Texas? We could spare a thousand Vertibird rides for you!

{Both laugh}

Walter: Well thanks, but was what I did really that important?

Knight: Absolutely! After our scribes did some digging on the vault, the Enclave could have wiped the whole lot of us away with...well, that's classified I'm afraid.

Knight 2: All you need to know is that the Enclave wouldn't have made a trip that distant, just to wrangle up a few Vault Dwellers.

Walter: Well either way it could have ended, I would have rather ended it with you boys. So far those Enclave fellahs sound like they mean trouble. Then again, history is written by the victor...

Knight: Now now, what we told you was true about the Enclave. They look out for no one but themselves.

Walter: Well can you blame them?

Knight: Yes, I can. It's one thing if you're a lone traveler trying to get by every day, but if that lone traveler had power like the Enclave's, they have a duty not hoard it.

Walter: From those posters they like to plaster on the billboards, they seem to support a good cause.

Knight 2: Oh please. You didn't actually believe that dribble, did you? They like to lure folks in without exposing the truth to them. I've seen what they do in Enclave facilities, and it ain't pretty.

Walter: Neither was that raid you did on the NCR at the HELIOS-1 plant.

Knight 2: Just who's side are you in anyway?

Knight: Now now knight, let's not throw the book at Mr. Camry so quickly. He's just trying to make a point.