

Crescent Rowhouse by Tom Cartos

Background

Arranged in a crescent at the heart of the Hilltop District, these beautifully crafted terraced homes stand out as a landmark in the city. Many of them are owned by government officials and prosperous business owners. It is often rumoured that they are the most expensive properties in the entire city although details of the rare sales are kept under wraps.

This particular house has recently come on the market for what seems to be an extraordinarily low price, and several buyers are unsurprisingly interested. One such buyer is perhaps more cautious than the others and wishes to understand why the price is so low. To this end they are looking to hire a group of skilful thieves to break in and find answers
