SPOILER ALERT:
Tetsuko will defeat the MONOLITH MAN...

...but that's when her troubles BEGIN!

This is a scene from a future issue of Kaijuu Fighter Tetsuko, that (I hope) will give you a taste of the kind of action you can expect from the series.

At the point in time in which this scene takes place (some time after the events of KFT #1), Tetsuko has become well-known and somewhat of a celebrity for her heroic battles against the daikaijuu that periodically appear to endanger Earth and its inhabitants. An organization has been formed to support her fight; Sonya has attained a position of great authority and responsibility within it. We see some of the stories take place within a control and observation center in which seasoned scientists, enthusiastic science students, and military personnel observe, plan and suggest strategies for defeating the monsters—and ultimately the nefarious forces responsible for inflicting them upon us.

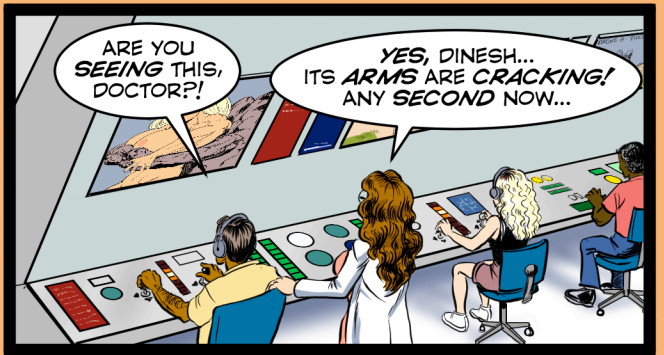

Tetsuko's battles are observed and recorded by several drones equipped with high-definition video and audio, piloted by technicians inside the control center. Like Captain Kirk on the bridge of the Enterprise, Sonya oversees everyone and everything; she can communicate with Tetsuko through the drones.

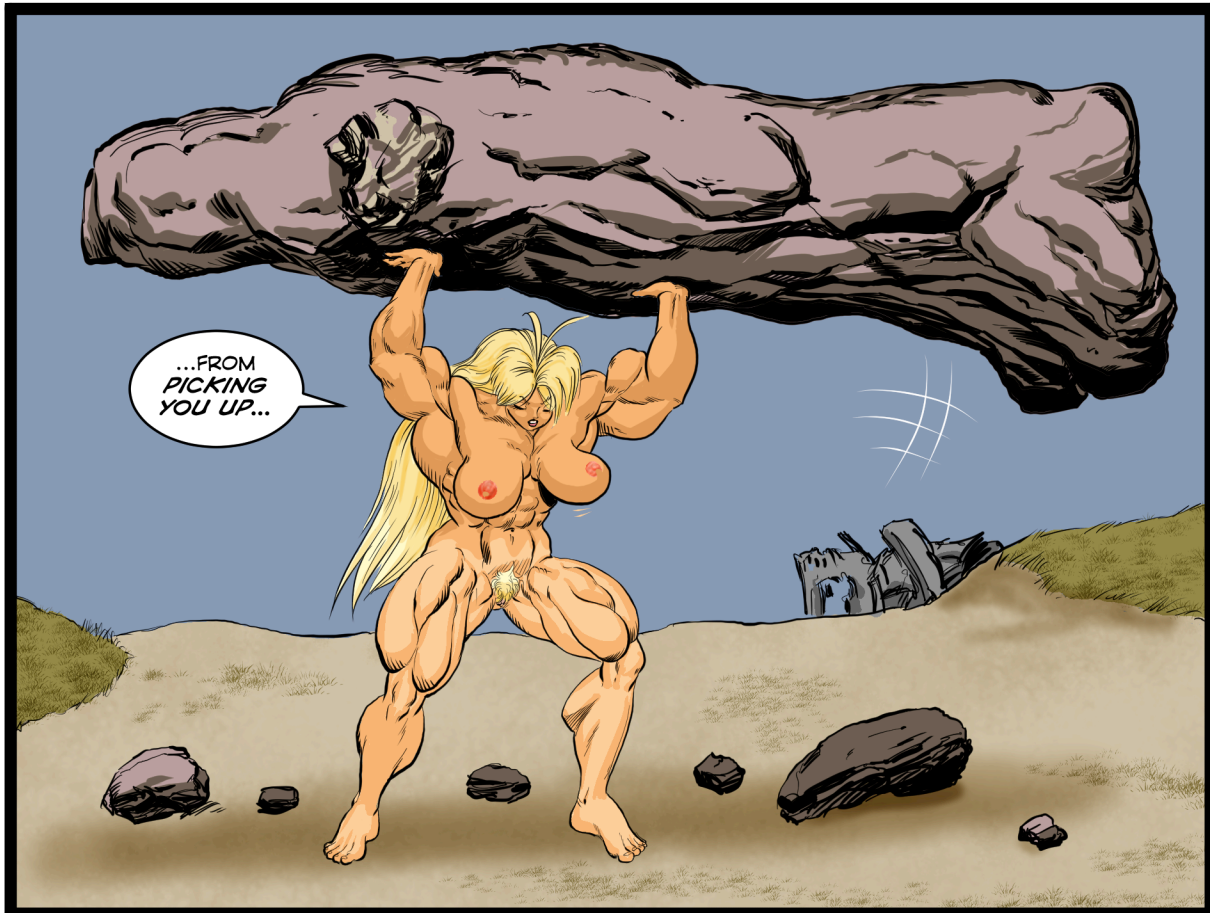

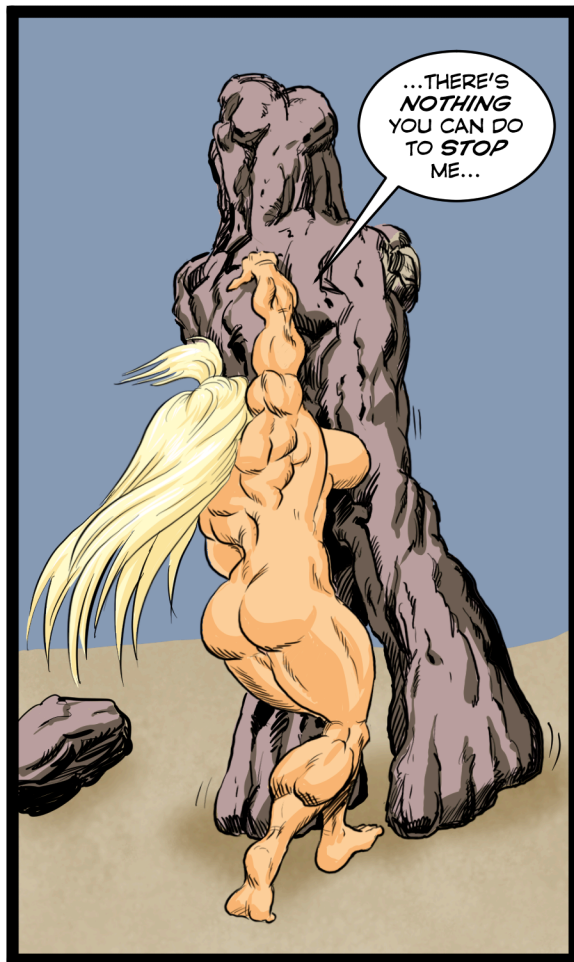

So as our scene opens, our golden giantess is already in a pitched battle with a monster seemingly made of "living rock", a creature dubbed the "Monolith Man" by one of the techs. The stone giant has caught Tetsuko in a bear-hug that she's finding difficult to escape...
