Chapter 8

Nina's growth didn't slow down, her body widened on a day by day basis, scientists and "Experts" could even watch in real time as her fat continued to push out from her body in real time, it was slow but based on their calculations, her body would soon cover the countryside and she would be threatening to crush a nearby town. Realistically, the government wasn't too worried about the town as it was only home to 3,000 people and easily could afford to relocate them, it was the other realisation that the team were discovering that frightened them the most. Within a year she would be on the border to the third largest city in the country.

Nina's fat body enveloping that town was not an option for them.

They worked day and night to try to understand her growth, they would ask her questions, but the belly bound woman was just so oblivious to their questions. Nina would often chuckle when they were examining her, they thought it best not to mention about crushing the nearby town, it might cause her stress.

So, they left her in the dark, oblivious to what she was headed towards.

Nina hadn't eaten in months but still her body was turning something into blubber, still feeling sated, just rubbed her fat soft skin and enjoyed the warm feeling she had inside of feeling full. 10 years of not knowing when to stop eating, suddenly all gone. It was a dream for Nina.

Today was the day that her fat would start to crush the first house in the small town. The government had made arrangements to move the townsfolk and pay them handsomely for their cooperation. The teams working about how to move her were starting to get worried.

"How are we going to move her, every calculation becomes harder and harder with each passing day because she is still growing, we are quickly approaching a point that we might not be able to create enough force to move her." A scientist said to a government official who was in charge of the "Nina" problem.

Scientists often roamed her body, she was far too big to feel it most of the time, her diameter now was measured in miles at this point. The scientists watched helplessly as her fat started to press against the first building, throughout the day her fat bulged over its exterior wall. By Noon it had caved in.

The growth was slow but continuous, people looked to the world for answers, but nobody was able to work out a way in which to stop her growing. Behind closed doors there was a lot of talk about using some medical means to slow her metabolism but despite their best efforts, these didn't work. At this point she was just expanding wider every second, she hadn't eaten in weeks.

Hmmm... I'm hungry...

Nina felt something that hadn't been felt since she was unable to feed herself. Hunger. It came back, the pain wracked her body, and she immediately knew she had to get some food. Enraged she screamed in agony.

“HUNGRY!”

The scientists observing her heard her pleas but thought better than to feed her any food.

Big mistake.

Nina was left for a short time, she was thrashing about on top of her mountain and crying out for food. Still being ignored, she felt her stomach start to churn and grumble. The deep noise boomed for miles, the windows on nearby buildings shook from the noises within her stomach.

“Sir, we are getting some strange readings from her.” A scientist called out, whatever chart his sensors were following were now rapidly changing and there were some flashing lights on the side of the screen.

Everyone paused and looked out the window and watched in fearful anticipation.

Like a large fat wave, her stomach started to wobble and rumble, the observation deck was quite far away from Nina, so much so that they had a few seconds of her stomach shaking and wobbling before they heard anything.

Nina’s stomach shook and jiggled wildly, her belly moving metres in seconds from the contractions and the expulsions of her stomach. The force from her belly alone was busting through walls but it is what happened next that took the team by surprise.

The rumbling caused an enormous amount of sound that shattered all the windows, even on their deck. The shaking was causing seismic activity, and everyone watched in awe as her belly caused an earthquake which registered on the Richter scale, the buildings of the small-town falling victim from being so close to the epicentre of the quake.

Though brief, the rumbling caused a significant amount of damage to the town, flattening a good portion of the building, thankfully the town had been evacuated but this new development raised many more alarm bells.

Nina screamed again, "Hungry!"

"What is she saying? Do we have audio?"

"Sir, she is saying 'Hungry', over and over..." The room fell silent once again, the alarms from the consoles becoming white noise and fading out as all the people in the room came to the same realisation.

"Get her food. Now."

The destruction caused by the earthquake was mostly not concerning to the teams now involved with the Nina project, in a few days her fat would have engulfed the buildings anyway. The bigger concern was what the rumbling would do as she grew bigger, got closer to bigger cities and eventually took over more land. Teams were sent to feed her, around the clock, they at first over fed her, to make sure there was no more rumbling but after some careful observation it was noted that overfeeding made her grow quicker.

Suddenly the clock was running faster, despite slowing down the feeding to an amount closer to her hunger threshold, the feeding had accelerated the expansion. Nina's weight had compacted the countryside but now that she was sprawling over the city, infrastructure was being affected, her fat body was crashing through the tarmac and blocking pipes. The world was mobilising on how to best tackle this growing threat to the planet, and that is exactly how they saw her. Nina had surpassed anything thought possible and yet she continued to grow, there was no reason to suggest she might stop.

Nina herself was content, she was kept fed, the brief time she felt hungry was now a bitter memory in her mind. Her size had become so huge that she couldn't really tell what was happening around her, she just sat and ate, slowly being pushed higher from the floor.

The view is amazing...

She was still oblivious, despite her gargantuan size, despite crushing a town, despite being funnel fed tons of food each hour, she just felt happy. She didn't know her true size, she didn't know the destruction she was going to cause, the only thing she knew was that as long as the food was still being pumped into her, she was happy.

Maybe I should go back on that dating app.
