Drudgework Observers are known for their immaculate vision and ability to spot potential threats long before they become obvious to the naked eye. A cunning inventor has seen fit to fashion the same kind of vision system used by the observers into a convenient headpiece that can be worn by most anyone. Looking at the world through the goggles of the cowl reveals a vibrance and sharpness to the world giving you advantage on perception checks that are based on sight.

As an action, you can manipulate the lenses in order to gain a more detailed look at things in the distance. You can alter the magnification of distant objects to appear anywhere from normal to twice as large.

Once per day, you can use an action to speak a command word and cause the goggles to glow a bright shade of piercing blue. While the eyes glow, you gain truesight out of a distance of 60 feet. Additionally, if you focus on a container like a chest or a crate for 1 minute, you can see vague outlines of what is within the container. This does not work if the container is lined with lead or similar heavy metals. The goggles glow and prove these benefits for 10 minutes before ceasing to function. The goggles regain this ability daily at dawn.
