Kiana had moved into the city many years ago... eager and excited to begin her career, she took a job as soon as she had found a place to live. What was a supposed to be an entry level job turned into a 'career' that wasn't going anywhere. Years went by and her drive dwindled. It wasn't until she uncovered a device that could alter the size of whatever it was focused on. Never approved for human testing, she took her chance on finally breaking out of the rut she was in. And did she ever... Now she was back to remove any evidence and to move on with her life...

"This one building had so many years of my life taken through the guise of 'building a career.'"
Kiana said, her foot already compressing the roof.

The building groaned as she continued to rest her foot on top of the delicate structure.

Her foot came down and the building parted immediately. Glass and metal was sent outwards as her foot pierced every floor in an instant.

Observers around the city watched in terror as the woman erased a part of the skyline in an instant. Panic began to erupt in the city below as she looked pleased with herself at the simple act.

Once an office drone, Kiana stood on the remains of the building that claimed her 20's...
wondering what would come next...

"So... thats it?" Kiana questioned. She'd worked up to the deed thinking it would bring about some great bit of closure... but it honestly left her feeling hollow.

What Kiana did not know is that the device she had used, as experimental as it had been, was not used on humans because it was never truly found to 'stably' increase the mass of something. Results varied even between the same subjects, and what she was about to find out, is she was not done with the experiment she started with such haste.

SMELL

The sound of the woman rapidly expanding had those who looked on first with terror, speechless again. What was once considered "The biggest thing to happen in town" just moments ago, is now over twice as tall as she was before.

Shuffling her feet, Kiana took on the new vantage almost unaware at first. "Wait, you all got even smaller?" She asked, confused, as the rubble and buildings around her feet were impacted greatly by the slightest of movements.

STRETCH C H

Another surge of growth and Kiana felt it this time. Flying high into the sky, her dwarfed the city even more as she reached her hands up, savoring the feeling of her expanding body.

Shifting her foot again, scores of buildings we cast away as the once proud structures were merely debris on her shoe at this point.

Rising far above the skyline for the city, those neighboring could feel the impact her increasing form was having on the earth. What were slight tremors continued to build into a rumble emanating from the high heeled woman.

Still her growth continues.
The city watches in horror as the clouds that were previously above her head,
are now obscuring the bottom of her heel.

The monolith that is her high heel towers over even the highest of buildings in the city.

Her growth halts, and the rumbles fade. Kiana is not entirely sure how large she has gotten, but given the landscape before her, she eagerly looks on to the horizon for what is clearly her new life. Where no one will be her boss. She only had one problem...

She still had some city on her shoe...
