

There was a pleasantness to this. The soft, slow comfortable feelings wrapping around you as your partner pulled you closer to them. The rest of the world didn't matter in this moment. It was just the two of you. Their words, your blank, open mind.

And with every moment that passed, your body sank more and more into the bed. Into comfort, and contentedness. It was a slow afternoon. Nowhere to be. No one to see, except for here, and one another. Their voice was making everything so nice. So drifts, and hazy.

You didn't want it to end. But eventually, they started to bring you up. But they gave you a gift as they did. The peaceful, contented feelings were still clinging to your mind as your eyes opened. The world seemed gentle, and warm. It was going to be a good day.
