

Lagoon Palace Festival Gardens by Tom Cartos

Background

Following the audience with the Prime Warden you are all invited to relax and enjoy a banquet dinner in the festival gardens. The air is warm and wet, but not uncomfortably so. Strong sweet floral scents fill the air and you are led to a lounging chair that overlooks the lagoon. Drinks, treats and substances of all varieties are passed around as the group of colourful individuals around you grows.

At some point in the evening tables appear and a feast is laid out, dishes appearing and empty plates disappearing as if by magic. Much of the rest of the night is a blur, and when you awaken in the morning it is hard to separate dream from memory.
