

BOUTIQUE RIVERSIDE HOTEL

BACKGROUND

Sarrios Bay is a much-loved destination for tourists and holiday-makers. The natural terrain of the Epicoatl foothills combined with the view over the bay makes for a breathtaking vista. It is close enough to Dorran for the elite class to regularly travel to their weekend homes, and being situated along the major land and sea trade routes means there is no shortage of visitors.

As with any wealth-driven destination, there is also a strong undercurrent of criminal activity looking to siphon off some of the non-stop flow of gold. Many of the business owners are involved in or at least aware of the scams and cons being run on a daily basis, but so long as it doesn't undermine their profit they are none too worried.

There are some enterprises however that would draw the ire of the Dorran guard were they discovered. Certain goods that are not allowed into the City are instead smuggled in around the bay and transported into the city via 'mules'. Wealthy individuals who, willingly or not, will bring the valuable goods back into the city in their luggage, knowing full well that the guard are far less likely to search them than the regular citizens.
